

MEDICAL BILLING

Industry Facts

I didn't see any cut backs in the medical billing field throughout the recession. The company I work for actually grew! This is currently a very high demand career in an ever-growing industry and well-trained professionals are needed.

- Holly, Medical Billing Professional

What do medical billing professionals do?

Medical billing professionals are crucial to keeping healthcare facilities operating effectively. Their specific responsibilities vary from location to location but often include the following:

- Registering the patient and verifying their insurance coverage
- Collecting the information required to create a claim
- Working directly with the insurance company, healthcare provider, and patient to get a claim processed and paid
- Reviewing and appealing unpaid and denied claims
- Handling collections on unpaid accounts
- Managing the facility's Accounts Receivable reports
- Answering patients' billing questions

Where do medical billing professionals work?

Medical billers can be found in a variety of healthcare facilities, including hospitals, clinics, doctors' offices, skilled nursing facilities, and home health agencies, among others. There are even employment opportunities in insurance companies and at specialized medical billing firms.

How much do medical billing professionals earn?

With many different opportunities, medical billers often have a variety of positions to choose from and can earn competitive salaries. The Department of Labor reports that the middle 50% of professionals in the field earn between $30,990 and $51,350 a year.

Is the medical billing field growing?

The 2016-2017 edition of the Occupational Outlook Handbook, published by the U.S. Department of Labor provides the following estimates:

- A growing job market, as industry employment is projected to grow 13%, or by 28,000 new jobs, by 2026.
- A high demand for medical billing services as the demand for healthcare services, increases due to an aging population and an increase in the number of insured due to the Affordable Care Act.
- A growing number of professionals needed in the field to act as liaisons between healthcare facilities, insurance companies, and other establishments, due to the higher demand for healthcare services.
