

Personal Trainer

INDUSTRY FACTS

What do personal trainers do?

Personal trainers have a gift for inspiring others. They take care of their minds and bodies, and that dedication yields a number of benefits—increased strength, greater mobility, boosted immune system. But here's the cool part. Personal trainers have a wealth of knowledge and they love sharing it with the larger community. They help others develop the skills necessary to successfully engage in physical activity. They assess their clients' current fitness levels, provide guidance, and help them achieve their personal goals. Here's what a typical day or week might look like:

- Teaching proper fitness and nutrition habits
- Observing clients' exercise routines and tracking their progress
- Developing fitness/meal plans based on client's needs and goals

Where do they work?

Certified personal trainers work in a variety of facilities such as health clubs, fitness centers, yoga studios, and even client homes.

How much do they earn?

According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor and Statistics, the average salary for personal trainers is just below $40,000 per year. Remember that salaries vary based on location, facility, and experience level.

How's the job outlook?

Employment of fitness trainers is projected to grow 13% through 2028, much faster than other occupations. And as businesses (across all industries) start prioritizing health for employees, the need for folks with exceptional knowledge in the field will just continue to grow.

"I was very impressed with what CareerStep had to offer. Affordable pricing for a comprehensive program, combined with the support and flexibility I needed. A perfect choice!"
